

Our world faces big challenges like poverty, hunger, health crises, injustice and inequality, global warming and climate change, environmental degradation, species extinction, war, and terrorism. These challenges can be solved, but only through coordinated efforts from governments, international organizations, businesses, community organizations, and families. In fact, we need everyone on the planet, whatever their life and work roles, to pitch in.

The 17 goals below were adopted by the leaders of 200 countries to focus the whole world on the most pressing challenges facing our planet. Which of these goals are most meaningful to you? Where could you make a difference?

People always ask, "What do you want to be." A better question is, "What do you want to do?" Instead of having to choose one occupation, most people find it easier to think about real-world issues they care about, then explore the many ways they can make a difference.

Career Callings lets you:

1. Explore your career callings, or purpose, using the UN Global Goals
2. Find employers with missions that align with your callings
3. See occupations they employ that appeal to you
4. Find learning paths to your preferred occupations (apprenticeship and skilled trades training, employer-based training, industry certification, vocational-technical, military, college, university).
